GIVING BACK

Scotland's Affric Highlands, home to Dundreggan.

SCOTLAND GOES WILD

Summer is in the air in the Scottish Highlands, where, as wildflowers decorate hillside meadows, a new endeavor is building momentum for Scotland's flourishing rewilding movement. Recently opened, the Dundreggan Rewilding Centre showcases the nonprofit Trees for Life's efforts to restore the Highlands' once-thriving Caledonian Forest – now fragmented by centuries of unchecked grazing, farming, and logging. Visitors can explore nearly four miles of trails winding through the woodlands of the 10,000-acre estate, rich with birch, oak, aspen, Scots pine, hazel, juniper, and ash trees that create a habitat for many of the other 4,000-plus plant and animal species found at Dundreggan. – Joel Centano
